Preferred Gun Oil of the Old West

Whale oils were used to create high-quality lubricants that possessed special desirable properties. These lubricants were thin, non-corrosive to metals, and remained liquid even in freezing temperatures. As a result, they were ideal for use in rifles, pistols, watches, chronometers and various other military instruments and machines. Sperm whale oil, in particular, was highly valued for its lubricating properties. It was used in a wide range of mechanisms, from watches to sewing machines to locks and guns. Guns, including the iconic 1911 pistol, relied on sperm whale oil for reliability. The oil's unique characteristics made it effective even in ultra-cold weather conditions. Sperm whale oil was the most expensive.
